It was too much! His hand went to his mouth, and he uttered a whoop which brought every Comanche within hearing pell-mell toward the grove. Such a rush would have been their best chance for crushing Bowie s men in any case, but the charging warriors found no Texans to crush. Wild were the whoops of wrath and disappointment, but Great Bear himself was equal to the occasion. His face expressed strong admiration of such a feat of generalship, and he said, loudly, -- Ugh! Big Knife great chief! Getaway heap! Comanche tired now. Find Texan by and by. There was no help for it. The only thing to do was to rest and to eat, for immediate pursuit was out of the question. Miles and miles away, an hour or so later, in another camping place as good as...
