Excerpt from Annals of Wyoming, Vol. 53: Spring, 1981 As construction of the Union Pacific, entered Wyoming, local inhabitants were apprehensive about the determination of division points along the Union Pacific line. These decisions by Union Pacific officials would determine the futures of Cheyenne, Laramie, Rawlins, Evanston and Green River. A number of followers of the railroad construction crews would stay in these division point towns, find useful occupations and contribute to the growth of the communities. Others would move from one construction site to another in their portable houses and tents, leaving few signs of the boom towns that were. Once at the end of the track.
